Specializations

Under Bergman's leadership, Peninsula Law uses a personalized approach to best serve their clients and are expert litigators who can take their case through trial. "I have a way of relating to people that allows me to understand not just what they are saying, but what they truly mean," says Bergman. "It lets me cut to the heart of what a client needs and what legal issues are viable, so I can get the job done. I not only handle the planning and administration side of estates, but I also know how to litigate and try a case, which is a skill set that not all probate attorneys possess. This gives our clients a priceless legal advantage."

Fearlessness, determination, intelligence and independence have been driving strengths in Beti Tsai Bergman's success. When she founded Peninsula Law in 2006, Bergman combined her experiences working for the Los Angeles City Attorney's Office with her expertise as a business and civil litigator to create a firm that is laser focused on probate, trust and estate administration, conservatorships, elder abuse, and trust and probate litigation. "When I had my second son I resigned as a city attorney, but didn't want to give up practicing law," Bergman says. "I immersed myself in estate planning, trusts and conservatorship when I started Peninsula Law and over the last 13 years, my firm has blossomed into an amazing business. I am certified by the California State Bar as an expert in estate planning, trust, and probate law. I also give seminars and teach in the field of probate law and trial advocacy." When it comes to probate, Bergman and her Peninsula Law team offer big firm resources with hands-on, personalized service. "I think of us as an elite boutique firm that specializes in probate," Bergman adds. "I subscribe to the philosophy that the key to true mastery is doing one thing 10,000 times, not 10,000 things one time."
